YP: The sound is good to me

YP: Thank you! I like to mobile cage

YP: Thank you, I like the mobile cage, I thought to making one for my geese

CD: That graph about the percentages perennial vs annual is very interesting. Is it percentages based on weight, or something else? I would love to see a more detailed breakdown if that's available.

PE: Yes, great graph !

MR: Looking great, your agroforestry project. You could probably make a whole presentation just on the topic raised with your annual/perennial graph, really interesting insights there. Agree with Martin too, we need more vegetables like Korean Giant Celery that can be harvested in winter.

Pd: Looking forward to hearing your experiences in Denmark.

Pd: same here. Maybe open this programma item again (i had that help before, when changing sound source)

Pd: Yes, great to anticipate the succession, also in relation to the personal

KB: 200 species of perennsial vegetables?! that's awesome! do you have a list of these?

KB: have you buit the rabbitats yourselves? they look gorgeous!

JP: @rowan +1

MC: Sound is fine for me

MC: SHows that maybe we need to do more work on winter perennial veg

RA: Hi Tycho and Karoline and all!

RA: Sound okay with me.

RA: My parents' garden had an old hazel when we moved in in 1968, and the grey squirrels got lots of the nuts (my Dad ate almost all the rest) but also planted lots so by the time I left even though the original tree had been destroyed (they sold the end part to a 'developer' who of course destroyed everything) there were hazels all over. I think they had a lot of Turkish hazel in their ancestry. Very good nuts.

RA: The perennial / annual vegetable graph is excellent.

RA: Don't we all decide we want more land?! Glad your dream came true, Tycho and Karoline!

RA: The tree 'belt' sounds like 'beetle banks' in arable fields here in Britain.

RA: 'Rabitats'!

RA: Agree the succession planning is good!

RA: Thank you Tycho and Karoline - another inspiring forest garden!

TR: Hi Tycho and KAroline - so excited to see what you are up to!

TR: the sound seems to have cut out - is thata problem for anyone else?

TR: sounds ok now, after closing and opening the crowdcomms site

TR: i love the long term vision in your work with succession.

IH: this is great. I definetly want to come visit the next time I am in DK! Quick question: Did you receive any sort of financial support for establishing the gardens? And what is your next step for marketing produce? tak!

TH: We apparently have the wrong time here..

TH: The Rabitats are home build - we designed them based on our experiences through the years ;)
